Mexican American Marine Gabaldon coaxed Japanese to surrender

CROSS CITY, Fla. – Guy Gabaldon, a World War II Marine scout with the 2nd Marine Division which invaded Saipan, used his knowledge of elementary Japanese and, with a lot of street smarts, talked 1,800 Japanese soldiers and civilians into surrendering. For this act of courage from June 15 to August 1, 1944, he was ultimately awarded the Navy Cross, the second highest award for valor. The citation read “Working alone in the front lines, he daringly entered enemy caves, pillboxes, buildings and jungle brush, frequently in the face of hostile fire, and succeeded in not only obtaining vital military information, but in capturing 1,800 enemy civilians and troops.” Gabaldon’s act of heroism saved both American and Japanese lives. It is noteworthy that many Japanese soldiers would commit suicide rather than surrender.

The very first night on Saipan, Gabaldon ventured out alone and returned with two Japanese prisoners after “using my backstreet Japanese.” Subsequent nights he returned with larger numbers. One night, July 8, 1944, the then 18-year-old Marine returned to camp with 800 Japanese soldiers and civilians. His buddies called him the “Pied Piper of Saipan.” He said he offered the Japanese candy, cigarettes, rations, and used a little trickery by telling them a large number of well armed Marines were behind the bushes or just over the hill and, if they did not surrender or if he did not return, the Marines would mount a full attack. Through his non-confrontational approach, he won the trust of the enemy.

At age 12, Gabaldon left his large family in East Los Angeles and lived with his Japanese American friends, twin brothers Lyle and Lane Nakano, who lived in the same neighborhood. Gabaldon adopted the Japanese customs, diet, and traditions and even went to a Japanese language school and delivered the local Japanese language newspaper with the Nakano boys. He joined the neighborhood kids when they formed a multi-ethnic “Moe Gang,” comprised of other Japanese American, Jewish American, Hispanic American and Afro American kids. They robbed stores, stole cars and “rode the rails.”

World War II split up the Moe gang, and its members went their separate ways. Japanese Americans were sent to internment camps from which the Nakano brothers volunteered for the 442nd RCT, and Gabaldon, at age 17, volunteered for the Marine Corps. They would not meet again until 1957 when the Nakano brothers and Gabaldon returned and exchanged their combat experiences on a TV show.

Following his discharge, he spent 40 years in Saipan as a businessman in the fishing and import-export industries. In 1960, Hollywood made a movie on his life, called “From Hell to Eternity” in which Jeff Hunter portrayed Gabaldon. He wrote a book in 1990 entitled, Saipan, Suicide Island, which was about his war exploits.

Saipan, consisting of 46 square miles—the size of San Francisco—was the scene of the bloodiest battles in the Pacific. The battle for Saipan was costly in terms of 3,000 U.S. Marines and Army casualties. When Japan lost the land (Saipan, Tinian and Guam) and the sea battle in the Marianas area, the US forces were within 1,200 miles of Tokyo, a striking distance for US bombers to invade the Japanese homeland.

Gabaldon died on August 31, 2006, of heart disease and is buried in Arlington National Cemetery. He is survived by his wife, the former Ohana Suzuki.

Filipino Americans hold reception to celebrate legislation

by Ben de Guzman, Esq., National Coordinator, National Alliance for Filipino Veterans Equity

WASHINGTON – The National Alliance for Filipino Veterans Equity (NAFVE) held a reception at the Mandarin Oriental Hotel in Washington, DC, on June 2 to celebrate the passage of legislation which provided a one-time payment and military recognition for Filipino soldiers who served under US command during WW II. For these aging veterans, it signaled the most significant victory in their struggle for over 60 years to restore the honor and dignity of their service to this country that was taken away from them when their status as US veterans was revoked by the 1946 Rescission Act. The reception recognized not only the veterans themselves but also their champions in Congress who helped secure this important victory.

The following supporters from Congress attended the reception: Senator Daniel Inouye (D-HI), Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman; Senator Daniel Akaka (D-HI), Senate Veterans Affairs Committee Chairman; Representative Mike Honda (D-CA), Congressional Asian Pacific American Caucus Chairman; Representative Bobby Scott (D-VA), Filipino American member of Congress; Representative Mazie Hirono (D-HI), Original Co-sponsor of Filipino World War II Veterans Family Reunification Act. Other community supporters who attended the reception were former Secretary of Transportation Norman Mineta, Major General Antonio Taguba, US Army (Ret), and several members of the JAVA Board of Directors.

Organizer of “Life Interrupted” project recognized

by Gerald Yamada, Esq.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. – Dr. Johanna Miller Lewis (pictured), University of Arkansas at Little Rock (UALR) professor of history and associate dean of the graduate school, won the 2009 National Education Association’s (NEA) Ellison S. Onizuka Memorial Award for her work creating “Life Interrupted.” The public history exhibits and curriculum document the World War II internment of Japanese-Americans in rural Arkansas at Jerome and Rohwer. Dr. Lewis received the award on July 2 at the NEA Annual Human and Civil Rights Awards Dinner in San Diego.

The “Life Interrupted” project was created in 2004 as a partnership between the UALR and the Japanese American National Museum, with major funding provided by the Winthrop Rockefeller Foundation.

The project included a national conference “Camp Connections: A Conversation About Civil Rights and Social Justice in Arkansas” that drew over 1,200 people to Little Rock. It also included eight exhibitions in venues around the city, the development of a documentary “Time of Fear” that examined the Japanese American World War II experience in Arkansas, and the writing of a children’s book. One of the UALR exhibits, “Against Their Will: The Japanese American Experience in World War II Arkansas” received a Best Exhibit Award from the Arkansas Museum Association at its annual meeting in 2005.

A strong component of the project was the training of master teachers and the development of curriculum so that the story of Japanese American incarceration during the war will be taught in Arkansas schools for years to come.

“I am thrilled this project has received such acclaim. Everyone involved in UALR’s Public History Program was honored to participate in this groundbreaking effort,” Dr. Lewis said. “The Life Interrupted project is a great example of how a metropolitan university can join with community partners and use its resources to enrich our understanding of the world around us.”

Life Interrupted told the story of the 17,000 Japanese-Americans who were dispossessed of their homes and property and sent to two camps in southeastern Arkansas for the duration of the U.S. war against Japan. They were among 110,000 Japanese-Americans forcibly removed from their homes on the Pacific Coast and Hawaii.

Dr. Lewis also represented the Arkansas camps in the Japanese American National Heritage Coalition, which was responsible for creating a federal grant program to fund the preservation of confinement sites used during World War II to imprison persons of Japanese ancestry and securing funding for the program. Gerald Yamada, Heritage Coalition’s National Coordinator, said, “Before the Life Interrupted Project, the people of Arkansas had little knowledge of the existence of the Jerome and Rohwer War Relocation Authority Camps. Dr. Lewis deserves the prestigious NEA award for her leadership and work that raised public visibility in the South of the injustices suffered by Japanese Americans during World War II.”

WASHINGTON – The Japanese American Citizens League (JACL) Third Annual Gala Awards Dinner, held at the JW Marriott Hotel in Washington, DC on September 17, paid special tribute to Japanese American veterans who served during WW II and the Korean War. US Senator Daniel K. Akaka, JAVA, Go For Broke National Education Center, National Japanese American Historical Society, and the Japanese American Korean War veterans were presented special awards for “telling the story of the Japanese American veterans and keeping their legacy alive for future generations.” All veterans and active duty members of the armed forces were asked to stand to be recognized and to be presented with a token of appreciation from the JACL. Senator Akaka, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs, was honored for his WW II military service, his role in getting benefits for veterans that they deserve, and his steadfast support for Asian American veterans.

The JACL this year commemorates 80 years since it was formed in 1929 by young Nisei leaders of the community.

The JACL continues its work today as the oldest and largest Asian American civil and human rights organization in the nation.

Video presentations at the gala were largely produced by Brandon Mita, National Youth Representative on the JACL National Board, and highlighted the Japanese American experience, the beginnings of the JACL, and the contributions of the veterans and honorees. The comfortable life experienced today by most Japanese Americans is a result of sacrifices and efforts made by early leaders, including veterans of the 100th Battalion/442nd Regimental Combat Team, the Military Intelligence Service (MIS), and others who served in regular units during World War II, and veterans of the Korean War. They are credited with helping to usher in the civil rights movement.

The emcee was Vice Admiral Harry B. Harris, Jr., USN, one of the highest ranking officers of the United States military of Asian American ancestry. The flag ceremony was presented by cadets from the Navy Junior ROTC Color Guard. Retired US Army Major General Tony Taguba introduced the color guard and led the pledge of allegiance.

Remarks were given by Congressman Mike Honda as Honorary Chairman and by the Ambassador of Japan to the United States, the Honorable Ichiro Fujisaki. Senator Daniel Inouye and his wife Irene were in attendance, as well as other dignitaries. Vocal selections were performed by Ed Ozaki with his wife Marina at the piano. National JACL Executive Director Floyd Mori and his wife Irene organized the Gala, and National President Larry Oda and Vice President for Operations Sheldon Arakaki participated.

JAVA booth at Cherry Blossom festival attracts hundreds of visitors

by Col Bruce Hollywood, USAF (Ret)

On April 4th JAVA manned a booth at the Sakura Matsuri (Cherry Blossom Street Festival) as part of the National Cherry Blossom Parade in Washington, DC which drew over 100,000 visitors. First held in 1961, it is the largest one-day exhibition of Japanese culture in the east coast of the United States. Stretching for nearly one mile through the streets of downtown Washington DC, from near the White House to FBI headquarters, the Sakura Matsuri is held each spring as the climax of the two-week National Cherry Blossom Festival. JAVA has manned this booth for six consecutive years in partnership with the Japan America Society of Washington, DC, which has graciously provided the booth at no cost to JAVA.

The JAVA booth, manned throughout the day by volunteers, provided Festival attendees with valuable information about the important role of Japanese American Veterans throughout the years. Hundreds of people stopped by to learn, to read the material provided, or to take a moment and say thank you to the veterans. Many visitors related that they had a father or uncle who had served with the 100th or the 442nd.

JAVA's book American Patriots was available for purchase and signing by authors Dr. Warren Tsuneishi and Dr. Stanley Falk. They were a huge hit, and every available copy was sold. JAVA memento coins were also sold, and brochures and membership information were handed out.

The project chairman Mike Yaguchi said "This is a great opportunity to get our message out to the public, and it could never happen without people stepping up to volunteer to serve at the booth."

Japanese American WW II exhibit to be built at Ellis Island

ROSSLYN, Vir. – In a presentation at a recent JAVA luncheon, Eric Saul, former curator of the Military Museum at the Presidio of San Francisco, outlined his ideas for the exhibit on the Japanese Americans experience during WW II to open on Memorial Day 2010 at the Ellis Island Immigration Station Museum, New York. Commissioned by the National Park Service, which estimates some 7,000 visitors to Ellis Island daily during the warm months, Japanese American soldiers who served during WW II and the 120,000 who were interned for the duration of the war will be honored. The theme of the exhibit will be "Go For Broke: Japanese Americans soldiers fighting on two fronts, the enemy abroad and prejudice at home." Saul said he would like "this exhibit to be a Japanese American community project and would welcome any participation and suggestions and loan of photographs and memorabilia."

The exhibit will be divided into the following components: (1) Japanese Immigration to the United States, 1885-1924; (2) Prewar Japanese Experience in Hawaii and the Mainland, 1924-1941; (3) Pearl Harbor and Japanese American Evacuation and Internment on the West Coast; (4) Japanese American Soldier in World War II; (5) Soldiers Returning Home and the Closing of the Internment

Book Review: A Tragedy of Democracy by Dr. Greg Robinson

Book Review by Gene Oishi, former correspondent for Baltimore Sun, as appeared on Amazon.com

Dr. Greg Robinson's latest book, A Tragedy of Democracy, is worthy of being the definitive work on Japanese American/Canadian wartime experience. As a Japanese American who spent World War II in an internment camp, I have over the past fifty years read nearly every book that has been written on the subject and I wondered what could be added to the mountain of information already available.

Robinson's work on the Japanese Canadian experience was almost totally new to me. I had read Joy Kogawa's novel Obasan and summary accounts of what Canadian Japanese endured during the war, but I was stunned to learn in detail the depth of the animosity and vindictiveness of the Canadian government and the harsh treatment it meted out to the hapless Japanese. It made me think that compared to our Canadian kin, we Japanese Americans had it easy. Much of what he wrote of the Latin American situation was also new for me.

But I call it a definitive work not simply because it deals with all of North America and much of the Latin American experience. This is the first book that gives coherence to a widely diversified, multi-faceted story. Until now, if someone were seriously interested in the Japanese American wartime experience, I would have recommended several books, some focusing on history, others on politics, law, sociology, psychology and so on. I think I can now say, "Read Greg Robinson's book." Beyond finding an impressive amount of original material, he took full advantage of all that has been written on the subject; he looked down from the mountaintop, so to speak, and provided a broad perspective that has been lacking. Although I already knew a great deal of the Japanese American experience, I found it deeply satisfying to come across even familiar material in a broad and coherent narrative that told the story more completely than anything that I have previously read.

In his first book, By Order of the President, Professor Robinson gave us a revealing and disturbing psychological profile of FDR, his biases and predisposition for putting all Japanese—he made little distinction between citizens and non-citizens—in "concentration camps" even before the outbreak of war. In this new work, Robinson demonstrates his psychological acumen regarding Japanese Americans struggling with their dual cultural identity. Describing the Japanese American dilemma of having to choose between the country of their parents' origin and of their own is not easy even for Nisei, or perhaps especially for Nisei, but Robinson, aided to some degree by the perspective of time, shows rare and keen insight into the Japanese American mentality.

Salyers Grubb dissertation on Nisei war time experience

HOUSTON, Tex. – Abbie Salyers Grubb received a PhD degree from Rice University, Houston, Texas, in April 2009. Her dissertation was entitled The Internment of Memory: Forgetting and Remembering the Japanese American Experience During World War II.

Grubb's interest in the Nisei experience began when she was an undergraduate history student at James Madison University, located in Harrisonburg, Virginia. She came across the book, Honor by Fire, by Lyn Crost, which chronicled the World War II story of the Japanese American 100th Infantry/442nd Regimental Combat Team and Military Intelligence Services. As an "Army Brat" and an aspiring military historian, she was captivated by the story of these thousands of men who put their lives on the line for the service of a country that, in many cases, had imprisoned their family members with no charges or trials but purely because of their race.

Grubb was so intrigued by the Nisei story that she wrote her undergraduate senior honors thesis on the subject, using interviews with JAVA members Grant Ichikawa, Joe Ichiuji, and Norman Ikari to provide a personal voice to her research. Abbie continued her education as a graduate student in history at Rice University in Houston, Texas. After completing her Master's Degree, she sought a topic for her dissertation and soon returned to the subject that had so captivated her as an undergraduate.

From 2005 until 2009, Grubb visited sites and institutions that helped her research such as the sites of nine War Relocation Authority internment camps, and various museums and memorials on Japanese American history. Grubb wrote, "I appreciate the welcoming and encouraging attitude that I met so frequently along my research, and I hope that my work will help inform future generations on the importance of remembering such significant events in our nation's history so that we might learn from our past and improve our future."

SHINSEKI MEETS VETERANS AT VA HOSPITAL

PALO ALTO, Calif. – During his visit of Palo Alto VA Hospital on June 23, 2009, VA Secretary Eric K. Shinseki met patient Mickey Makio Akiyama, Co I, 442nd RCT. Akiyama told Shinseki the hospital staff are truly professionals and thanked the nation for its care of veterans. Also visiting Akiyama at that time were Lawson Sakai, Co. E, 442nd RCT, and Astro "Al" Tortolano, an "Italian Nisei" as he calls himself, and a survivor of the trapped battalion of a Texas division in the Vosges forests of eastern France in October 1944. The battalion was saved by the 442nd RCT. Shinseki told the veterans the nation recognizes the supreme contributions men and women made to national defense during WW II, including the Nisei who fought on both European and Pacific fronts while their families were locked up in internment camps.

HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPAL DURSO RETIRES

Michael A. Durso (pictured), who retired in June 2009 as Principal of Springbrook High School in Montgomery County, Maryland, was particularly impressed with the character and moral fabric of Japanese Americans who had endured such mistreatment in concentration camps by their government. He observed that he and many others found it hard to move past such events without maintaining a certain bitterness and resentment. As such, during his tenure he viewed visits to Springbrook High School by both JAVA members and the Tsukegee Airmen as positive role models, as well as an opportunity for students to hear history's lessons speak through living voices, and for all to foster a greater awareness and respect for what was endured in this passing generation. MAJOR GENERAL ALEXIS THEODORE LUM

Major General Alex Lum, 82, who had an illustrious military and civilian career, passed away on August 20, 2009, in Honolulu, Hawaii. He was committed with full military honors on September 10 at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific at Punchbowl and buried at Diamond Head Memorial Park.

MG Lum, raised during the Great Depression, lived simply, appreciating every accomplishment and earning every achievement. His memorial service at Our Lady of Peace Cathedral in downtown Honolulu was attended by about 150 family and friends, including a number of general officers. GEN (Retired) David Bramlett, former Commanding General of US Ground Forces Command, served as master of ceremonies, and MG Bob Lee, state Adjutant General, state judge Fa'auuga To'oto'o, and granddaughter Lindsey shared remembrances. Letters from Congressional leaders, Governor Linda Lingle, and Mayor Mufi Hannemann were read.

MG Lum served in the US Army from 1946 to 1947 as an enlisted man, from 1950 to 1953 as a platoon leader (2nd Lieutenant) in the Korean War, and from 1953 as a member of the Hawaii Army National Guard. He served in the Vietnam War in 1968 with the 29th Brigade. After the war he served in the Hawaii National Guard Headquarters, and in 1980 was appointed to head the Hawaii National Guard with the rank of brigadier general. From 1983 to 1991 he served as State Adjutant General with the rank of major general.

From 1992 to 2007 MG Lum was US Senator Daniel K. Inouye's special assistant on military affairs. According to the Honolulu Advertiser, Senator Inouye said, "Alex Lum was a great American patriot and a dedicated public servant. He served our nation in war and peace. Many of the projects and programs that we find in the military services in Hawai'i were brought to fruition with the guidance and wisdom of Alex Lum." Only his failing health finally forced him from continuing his community service.

General Lum is survived by his wife Leimomi, daughters Angela Thomas and Alexia Carvalho, and son Oliver; four grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

From the Editor

Every day I see Hiroshi "Hershey" Miyamura. You see, I am back in the United States at Ft. Stewart, Georgia, assigned to the famed 3rd Infantry Division as the Brigade Judge Advocate for the 4th Infantry Brigade Combat Team. Lining the hallway of my brigade headquarters right outside my door, the "Wall of Heroes" displays pictures and citations of the 51 Medal of Honor recipients from the 3rd Infantry Division. Just a few frames from Audie Murphy's photo, Hershey's picture looks great up there! Each morning (sometimes out loud) I say, "Good day and thank you" to Hershey and to all those who served so honorably.

The 3rd Infantry Division displays great pride to this day. I see it all around, the distinctive blue and white striped insignia adorning hats, shirts, and license plate frames, and even tattooed on a few arms at the gym! The physical training is intense: running and ruck marches before sun up. The Brigade Combat Team life is busy, and the "op tempo" is fast. Nevertheless, at the end of the day, when I'm just about beat, Hershey Miyamura and all those guys up there on the "Wall of Heroes" inspire me to "Go For Broke!"

Real-life connection between Billy Tucci's SGT Rock comic book series and the 442nd RCT!

One of Billy Tucci's digital colorists, Bill Farmer, is married to the granddaughter of 442nd RCT veteran SSgt Harry H. Nakashima (1916-1998), 3rd Bn, Co L, 442nd RCT. Nakashima was born in the USA, and his father sent him back to Japan after his mother had passed away. When he turned 18 his family told him he would have to make a decision to be American or Japanese. He chose to be an American citizen and moved back to the US. Nakashima's father had passed away while he was in Japan, so he lived with his aunt in Texas when he returned. He had worked in her family's restaurant until he enlisted in the Army in September 1941. After the war he became an accountant in Colorado; he married and had three children, two daughters and one son.
